IFTR WORLD CONGRESS

The 9th World Congress of the International Federation for Theatre Research will be held in Leipzig, Germany, from September 20th to 27th, 1981. In keeping with tradition, a major part of the Congress will consist of a scientific conference devoted to the theme, The Art of Acting: Focus of Theatre Work, organized by the German Democratic Republic members of the Federation.

Professor Dr. Rolf Rohmer, IFTR President, reports that "this subject was recommended by the last World Congress. It has become a matter of great urgency to deal with the actor and his artistic work, with the constituent factors in theatre. This fully complies with the topical phenomena of contemporary theatre in the world; and in the past years its importance was emphasized at the various regional theatre conferences of the International Theatre Institute for Asia, the Arab countries, South America, and especially at the European-North American regional conference as well as at the World Theatre Conference in Paris in March 1980."

The scientific conference will begin with a plenary session at which three fundamental lectures will be delivered by one representative each from the German Democratic Republic, a West European or North American country, and an Asian or African nation. A report will also be given on the results of the Lecturers' Conference held last September dealing with the topic, "The Modes of Contemporary Non-literary Theatre: Aesthetics, Aims, and Problems."

Five group discussions on the following subjects are planned: 1) Art of acting and social reality, 2) Special aspects of the actor's creative (Continued on Page 4)
PHILADELPHIA THEATRE EXHIBIT

On Stage in Philadelphia 1700-1900 is the latest exhibition at the Library Company of Philadelphia that highlights the legitimate theatre and other forms of entertainment in playbills, posters, photographs and plans of views of theatres from the collections of the Library Company, the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, and TLA member Frank C. P. McGlinn. The exhibition will continue through July 3d of this year.

Among the many "firsts" in the exhibit is the earliest known Philadelphia playbill for Tunbridge Walks, by Thomas Baker, staged by Lewis Hallam's Company on 27 May 1754, at the New Theatre in Water Street (between Front Street and the Delaware River). Also on display is a playbill for one of the first Shakespeare plays presented in Philadelphia. Romeo and Juliet was produced by David Douglass' American Company on 16 December 1772 at the Theatre in Southwark.

Other playbills herald the performances of the finest actors of the day: Edwin Forrest, the first great Philadelphia-born actor, as Othello in 1826; Edwin Booth as Richelieu in 1863; and John Wilkes Booth as Richard III in 1863.

The exhibit features the first play published in America, The Prince of Parthia. The play was written by Thomas Godfrey of Philadelphia and was printed here in 1765, four years before its first performance, also in Philadelphia. Subscribers to the volume included John Penn and Benjamin Franklin who signed for twelve copies. Also shown are prompt books used by Wignell & Reingale's Company at the New Theatre in Chestnut (sic) Street in the 1790s.

A key American first is the autograph manuscript of William Henry Fry's opera Leonora of about 1845. This was the first opera written by an American (who was also a Philadelphian) to be produced in this country. It was first performed on 4 June 1845 at the Chestnut Street Theatre. Other items from the Library Company's collection of all the known manuscripts of Fry, plus some of his printed works, are included.

The Escape; or, A Leap for Freedom (Boston, 1838) is the first published play by a black author. William Wells Brown wrote this well received five-act satire against slavery, the only high comedy in American abolitionist literature.

Theatre buildings themselves featured in prints, photographs, and architectural drawings of some of the nearly 300 houses active in Philadelphia before 1900 include William Stickland's plans of 1820 to replace the burned Chestnut Street Theatre; the Olympic Theatre built originally to house circuses, the walls of which remain standing in what is now the oldest theatre in America, the Walnut Street Theatre; pre-Centennial photographs of the Academy of Music and the Chestnut, Walnut, and Arch Street theaters; and later photographs of the stages of Broad Street — Kiralfy's Alhambra Palace at Locust, the Metropolitan at Poplar, and the Grand at Montgomery Avenue.

Entertainment abounded in Philadelphia for those not interested in Shakespeare and the legitimate theatre. In the exhibition are posters promoting the great magician and ventriloquist Sigmor Blitz; Laughing Gas concerts; Stereopticon shows; Minstrel and Gospel concerts; Burlesque and Vaudeville shows; trapeze artists, sword-throwers and glass blowers; and circuses and equestrian performances.

PUBLICIATION NOTES

Lee Nemchek is the author of "Education for Theatre Librarianship," published in the Summer 1980 issue (21:1) of Journal of Education for Librarianship. The article was written while Ms Nemchek was a student at the University of Southern California School of Library and Information Management. Her "historical examination of special courses developed in library schools for work with performing arts collections indicates a marked scarcity in such courses" and suggests that "further research is necessary to determine the feasibility of developing future programs in library schools."

ACTRESS PUZZLE

The names of twenty-five movie actresses, current and historical, are hidden in the maze of letters. The clues are the names of a character portrayed by each on the screen in a drama or comedy. Musical comedies are excluded. The names read forward, backward, up, down, or diagonally, are always in a straight line and never skip letters. They may overlap and letters may be used more than once, but not all the letters will be used. To start, the name DRU is circled, the answer to No. 1 in the diagram (Joanne Dru in the movie Red River).

GERSHWIN'S BLUE MONDAY

The Library of Congress has recently acquired the only known holograph of George Gershwin's Blue Monday. Gershwin family members have watched over his manuscripts with such care over the years that it is seldom one turns up elsewhere than in the Gershwin Archive which they established at the Library of Congress. When a manuscript as rare and as important as Blue Monday becomes thus available, it is a noteworthy occasion indeed.

Blue Monday (also known as 135th Street) represents George Gershwin's first attempt at writing an extended composition. This short opera was planned as the second-set-opener of George White's revue, Scandals of 1922. As such it received a single performance, on the opening night of the show, after which it was quickly and quietly dropped. In the years since that performance, the work has become famous as an historical entity, although few can whistle a tune from it. There have also been a series of attempts to revive it, ranging from a performance by Paul Whiteman as the climax of the second of his "Experiments in Modern Music" (the first "Experiment" had ended with the world première of the Rhapsody in Blue), through a brief, tantalizing excerpt in the film biography of George Gershwin, to a television special in the 1950s on Omnibus with the Duke Ellington orchestra. The first recording of Blue Monday, appearing in 1977, gave most listeners their first contact with the work. It is still unpublished, though it used to be listed on the flyleaf of published scores of other Gershwin concert works.

The general consensus is that Blue Monday combines good music with a plot bad enough to make the work unsuccessful. (Woman shoots lover thinking he has received message from another woman; message turns out to be from his sister.) Nobody is likely to claim that it is a major work of art like its descendant Porgy and Bess, and yet its historical and musical value and its importance to the Library's Gershwin Archive can hardly be matched simply because it is a first step toward that masterpiece. It shares with Porgy the idea of a black cast, the idea of using "numbers" which might fit into a Broadway show as part of an operatic fabric (this is not to imply that all the numbers in Porgy and Bess would fit into a Broadway show), and a certain high seriousness. Perhaps the very awfulness of the libretto is an attempt to make it seem more operatic; the book comes out something like freeze-dried Pagliacci.

Two other important sources for the work are Will Vodery's orchestration for the premiere, a 1970 gift to the Library of Congress by Ira Gershwin, and Ferde Grofe's orchestration for the Whiteman revival now in The New York Public Library. Thus, the new acquisition constitutes the composer's only holograph in existence.

Funds for the purchase of the Blue Monday manuscript were provided by The Librarian's Fund and the Music Division's Da Capo Fund. (Courtesy of the Library of Congress Information Bulletin, 1 February 1980)

CONFERENCE ON PRESERVATION MANAGEMENT IN PERFORMING ARTS COLLECTIONS

The Conference on Preservation Management in Performing Arts Collections Committee is happy to report that the Theatre Library Association grant application to the National Endowment to the Humanities has been accepted in full. This bit of good news will provide the necessary funding to hold the three and one-half day Conference/Workshop in Washington, D.C. in the Spring of 1982. The date had been originally set for November of this year.

The committee is still seeking names of individuals qualified by training and/or experience to conduct a conference session on one of the categories outlined in the previous issue of Broadsie (8:2). A consultant will be asked to visit a number of repositories, to summarize the findings in a written report, to present a paper dealing with the whole spectrum of problems, and to discuss the various solutions.

For additional information contact Brigitte Kueppers, Shubert Archive, Lyceum Theatre, 149 West 45th Street, New York, N.Y. 10036. Telephone: (212) 944-3895.

WORK IN PROGRESS

NEW REFERENCE WORKS

The Federation Internationale des Archives du Film (F.I.A.F.) has published A Handbook for Film Archives. Edited by Eileen Bowser, Curator of Film at the Museum of Modern Art in New York, and John Kuiper, Director of the Film Department, International Museum of Photography at George Eastman House, the 151-page guide is the first comprehensive manual on film archive practices.

The handbook contains an introduction and chapters on "Acquisition and Selection," "Preservation," "Cataloguing," "The Documentation Department," "Copyright," "Access to the Collection," "Practical Work," and "The Collection of Film Apparatus." Each is written by a staff member of one of the F.I.A.F. archives and emphasizes practical details of day-to-day work in a film archive. As such, it is particularly useful to those, such as librarians and film students, who need a reliable guide to the way film archives operate.

A Handbook for Film Archives may be purchased from F.I.A.F., 70 Coudenber, 1000 Brussels, Belgium, for $40.

A Checklist and Union Catalog of Holdings of Major Published Library Catalogs in METRO Libraries (METRO Miscellaneous Publication No. 27, December 1980) is an authoritative subject bibliography (with cross references) of some eighty alphabetical entries including 351 catalogs of major United States Libraries published in the last twenty years. To make the checklist as comprehensive as possible, some major catalogs not found in METRO library collections are recorded. A helpful name index identifies both collections and libraries when their names differ from the main entries. To order this 64-page publication, compiled by New York University Librarian George Thompson, send a check or money order for ten dollars ($10) — fifteen dollars if an invoice is required — to METRO, 33 West 42d Street, New York, N. Y. 10036.

Vance Bibliographies has added two new titles to its distinguished Architecture Series: A-438, Theater Architecture: a Basic Bibliography, by Mary Vance (6p. $2) and A-450, Theater Architecture in California: an Annotated Bibliography, by Glenna Dunning (29p. $4.50). Still available is A-9, American Non-Collegiate Performing Arts Center, by James Carlton Starbuck, 1978 (14p. $1.50). When ordering indicate series number, author, and complete title and send to Vance Bibliographies, P.O. Box 229, Monticello, Illinois 61856. Pre-payment accompanying order is appreciated. Orders totalling $20 or less are charged one dollar for postage and handling.

HOUSEMAN MEMOIRS

John Houseman’s two-volume memoirs, Run-through and Front and Center, are now available in paperback from Touchstone Books/Simon and Schuster (1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N. Y. 10020) at $7.95 each. Both books by the distinguished actor, author, director, and producer were nominated for the National Book Award.

Run-through, winner of the 1972 George Freedley Memorial Award, chronicles Mr. Houseman’s early years in Europe, the beginnings of his professional theatre career, his fascinating work with the Federal Theatre Project, and his remarkable view of the young Orson Welles during their collaborative years at the Mercury Theatre and in such films as Citizen Kane.

Front and Center recreates the next fifteen years of his life from 1940-1955. It includes his wartime work as producer of the “Voice of America” as well as his close-up of Hollywood in the 40s as a producer of films including The Blue Dahlia, Ludius Caesar, and Lust for Life.

(Continued from Page 1) process: the actor in the process of staging and in performance, 3) The actor in the communication process of theatrical art, 4) Scientific investigations into the art of acting: methodology of research and problems of documentation, and 5) Art of acting and theatre critique. These topics will be discussed by giving historical as well as topical examples of theatrical work.

Additional congressional highlights will include performances by GDR theatre groups as well as by theatre companies from abroad. Two excursions are planned: one to Dresden, and the other to Meiningen and Gotha.
